The Antaeus Company has risen to the challenge, taking on the macabre play Macbeth, Shakespeare’s shortest and bloodiest tragedy. Misguided by his ambitions, the story of Macbeth is one of a Scottish general and his short tenure as a tyrannical, violent and paranoid king.

Directed by Jessica Kubzansky, and featuring a fully double cast of “the Kinsmen,” “the Thanes” and the random “Hurlyburlys” crew consisting of all the cast members shaken up and placed at random in the play, Macbeth’s constantly changing cast guarantees a new and exciting twist each show. Kubzansky adds her own analysis to Macbeth’s fall from general beloved by his king and countrymen to ruthless murderer. As a prequel to Act One, Kubzansky’s Macbeth opens to a dense fog as the Macbeths make their way down stage to a barely visible coffin. In her arms Lady Macbeth (Ann Noble) holds an infant whom she begrudgingly places in the coffin and is then dragged away screaming hysterically. No longer needed as a pillar for his distraught wife, Macbeth (Bo Foxworth) collapses beside the coffin and grieves for his lost child. The play then starts in the traditional fashion.

This bold emotional depiction of Macbeth as a grieving father with nothing left, shifts the play’s dynamics and the audience is left to decide if they should pity Macbeth or view him as inherently evil, a question not easily answered in this context.

The intimate settings of the Antaeus theatre, draws the audience into Macbeth’s rapid decline into hallucinations by using the narrow oasses between the Foxworth is forceful and manic as Macbeth. His descent into madness is organic and so gradual adding to the complexity Kubzansky has weaved. Noble’s Lady Macbeth is twitchy and unsympathetic to her husband’s initial hesitations. At times Noble’s whole body contorts as her guilt begins to cripple her, the onstage transformation of the two Macbeths is breathtaking.

Joe Holt as Banquo is an unexpected surprise and delightfully seamless. Peter Van Norden as the kind and humble King Duncan later reincarnated as Macbeth’s servant Seyton, whether an intentional act by Kubzansky, is brilliant as Duncan and comical as Seyton.

Sparse set design aid along with dampen lighting, further add to the dreariness that is Macbeth’s futile attempts at glory.

“Macbeth” runs through Aug. 26 at The Antaeus Company, 5112 Lankershim Blvd., North Hollywood. Performances are Thursday through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m. with talk-backs following Thursday night performances. Tickets are $30 for Thursday and Friday and $34 for Saturday and Sunday. To order call 818.506.1983 or go online to www.antaeus.org Join on Facebook at www.facebook.com/antaeustheater and follow on Twitter @AntaeusTheater

Also fans of classic theatre might be interested in Antaeus Company’s ClassicsFest: Six Classics in Six Weeks running July 22-August 27. Admission is Free with a $10 suggested donation at the door.

Printable Version of the Article
E-Mail This Article To A Friend

RELATED ARTICLES

Related Articles: No Related Content Found