Antaeus Leadership Note

On behalf of all of us at Antaeus, welcome to the second show of our 2022/23 Season, Love and Information. We’re delighted that you’re joining us! And we’re thrilled to dive back into the brilliant work of playwright Caryl Churchill. Since producing both Top Girls and Cloud 9 back in our North Hollywood space, our admiration for her writing has only grown.

In fact, she’s the author mentioned most in conversations with directors and actors when asked for their short list of dream projects. We think it’s because like all great authors her work is both extremely specific and almost magically universal. She has great prescience and a ton of humanity. She’s not afraid to ask the big questions.

In a time when technology has offered us effortless connection and unprecedented intimacy — as well as lonely detachment and dark alienation — the play bravely examines what it means to be human. It’s hard to think of a more timely play, and to experience this piece in a room full of other people is the joy that can only come from live theater.

Caryl Churchill, with the confidence of a true genius, allows the scenes in this play to be ordered and populated in whatever manner the director of the play chooses. To take on this herculean task, we’re over the moon to have Antaeus Company Member Emily Chase return to us as director. Many of you will know Emily’s fine work as an actor as well as remember her award-winning production of Jennifer Maisel’s Eight Nights which graced this stage in 2019.

We also hope you’ll join us later in the spring for our production of William Shakespeare’s look at the world of loss and redemption — The Tempest directed by Company Member Nike Doukas. And look for an announcement of our 2023/24 Season of four exciting plays coming soon!

Cheers!

The video and/or audio recording of this performance by any means whatsoever is strictly prohibited.
Caryl Churchill, long considered one of the greatest playwrights in the English language, has said, “I enjoy finding a form that seems best to fit what I’m thinking about.” Churchill wrote Love and Information in 2012, when she was 74 years old and had been writing plays for over 50 years. This play is very different in form from her other experimental work, though: it’s a series of conversations between people, none of whom can be the same. In Churchill’s prescience, she foresaw the age of TikTok, of rabbit holes on YouTube, of swiping through bits of lives and information.

The characters in the play wrestle with misinformation, but they are still driven by the human passion to connect despite the isolation of information silos. They probe the workings of the brain and the way that memory influences our perceptions of others.

In this production, we’ve employed projections to reflect how ubiquitous screens have become as a means of social connection over the decade since the play was written. Our projections also serve to animate what goes on inside people’s brains in these hyper-connected times, as torrents of information pour in.

About the casting… Churchill doesn’t provide any stage directions, character descriptions, or names for Love and Information. Usually, a play is like a blueprint of a house that the director and designers can fill with decor and furniture. This house, though, is missing an entire wall and its roof as well! Collaboration with other artists is central to Churchill’s practice; in this case, the playwright insists that the actors and director participate in the very construction of the play.

Our cast is diverse in terms of culture, age, and gender identity. As the director, I wanted the actors to be free to develop their roles from their own perspectives. So I did what I call “consensual casting” — actors collaborated in building the world of their characters. And you, the viewer, will be a collaborator too; you’ll fill in the details with your imagination, as the best theater invites an audience to do.

- Emily Chase, Director of Love and Information
